PREAMBLE

We define FORGIVENESS¹ as the act of asking for and extending forgiveness between the offender and the offended person. When the offender asks for forgiveness, he or she must make a solemn promise or resolve not to repeat the offense. Furthermore, he or she must make restitution for the wrong, in some way reverse the harmful effects of the wrong, and, where possible, bring healing and happiness. Forgiveness underpins the survival of the human family as one indivisible whole with a common need for universal love, "joy," peace, patience, compassion, gentleness, kindness, forgiveness, and happiness (Mark 11:25, ESV).

Whether an action is intentional or unintentional, forgiveness is an essential healing virtue. The offender must ask for forgiveness. Likewise, the offended person must extend forgiveness, not merely from the head but also the heart, and without any reservation. Otherwise, real restitution, healing, and happiness become nonexistent, and forgiveness becomes a mere mechanical exercise. Forgiveness heals both the offender and the offended. Anger, hate, the need for revenge, and unhappiness among individuals and nations may inspire a lack of forgiveness.

Many individuals and nations have risen beyond personal and national pride and asked for forgiveness for transgressions against other people and nations. Conversely, some individuals and nations cannot bring themselves to ask for forgiveness for fear that it is an admission of culpability. Forgiveness and mercy portray great character and strength, and they open doors of "mutual returns." A more critical but unrealized benefit of forgiveness is the positive influence that forgiveness has on the health of those who choose to make forgiveness a way of life.

The following templates below (Templates 1 – 5) provides some guidance regarding our nature of forgiveness (using a sample (1 of 10 Templates)), referenced against a pre-determined "Answer Scores." ("Discovering Your Optimum 'Happiness Index' (OHI)" Chapter 5. details a process of Six Steps to achieve a state of forgiveness).
